What Professor Gilmore says of "Pamela:

Joseph B. Gilmore, A. M., Professor of Logic, Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Rochester, is a recognized authority upon literary matters, and in the following remarks concerning "Pamela":

"The public will find in "Pamela", under the thin disguise of fiction, a vigorous and effective satire on the "Woman's Rights Movement," and if I mistake not, will be interested in the adventures of General Gallipoli, and in the pen-picture of the state of things which would naturally exist were the true relation of the sexes had been subverted. The Republic of Pamphile is but a humorous exaggeration of what any civilized country might become, in which the rights of woman (in the sense which is too often attached to that much abused phrase) were assured."
